THE SECOND POINT. Regarding the second point raised, the admission of testimony as to bad character for chastity, it is held that such testimony could only be introfuced in rebuttal of testimony of the defense to establish good character. The defense in this case introduced no such testimony. The prosecution could present testimony as to chastipecuniary matters. Neither trait of character had anything to do with the crime committed. The prosecu-tion cannot initiate investigation of haracter, and if invited by the dense, can only submit testimony as to he traits of character impugned by the nature of the crime charged. In present case, the detense had called no witness as to character, and objected to the prosecution doing so. The ruling of the court below is, therefore, held to be incorrect. The THIRD POINT

Judge Wallace reviews the three points raised and argued by counsel:

First—The refusal of the court below to grant a new trial on evidence that Beach, one of the juror, was blased, and had formerly declared that the defendant ought to be hanged.
